MA Creative and Critical Writing (Masters Stage)

This highly successful MA in Creative and Critical Writing was one of the first to offer modules dedicated to the theory and practice of teaching creative writing and the theoretical and practical analysis of the creative process. These options complement the creative and critical strands of the degree and offer you the opportunity to become a writer prepared for the modern professional arenas in which you may find yourself.

MODULES:

HM7101: Creative Projects 1: Project Beginnings

This module enables students to identify and begin a first draft of an independent creative project. Over the course of the module, students will identify, draft, edit and present a selection of early creative work and qualify their intentions for further writing in a critical commentary.

HM7102: Creative Projects 2: Project Development

This module facilitates students to continue to construct an independent project composed of a critical and creative element in their medium of choice. Over the course of the module, students will continue to construct, draft, edit and present a creative piece, initially developed in HM7101, and qualify the outcome of the second development phase of the creative project developed over the modules within an accompanying critical reflection.

HM7103: Creative Projects 3: Project Completion

This module has students enter the third development phase of their creative project composed of a critical and creative element in their medium of choice. Over the course of the module, students will continue to write, draft and edit their creative work, continuing to build on their creative writing developed in HM7101 and HM7102. They will present a creative dissertation and qualify the outcome within an accompanying critical reflection.
